Johnson uses stacked deck

Generally speaking Gov. Paul Johnson's advocory of Mississippi being really dry or else made liguor legally available in those areas which do Bunk such was received with praise. Certainly the Covernor spoke with candor, generally calling a spade a spade.

Unfortunately the actual proposal made by Mr. Nonnason was not quite as andid as his remarks. From the newspaper accounts we have read it appeared the people would first vote on whether to allow local option and then the counties could vote on whether that county would legalize liquir sales. The bill proposed by the governor, however, is more complicated by trying to do two not necessarily con sistent things at the same time.

Under the proposal when a vote for local option is recorded it is also a vote for legalized alcohol the voter's county. Thus if a voter prefers his county dry but is willing to let voters in other counties make their own decision, he is over the barrel. If he votes for local option he automatically votes for the municipalities in his county to be wet.

Other provisions of Gov. Johnson's proposed bill are subject to close scrutiny, such as state stores as private liquor stores, but the illustration used is sufficient to make some of us think the bill should be examined carefully throughout. Unfortupately, as written it has the appearance of a stack-

However, two colonies exem never to be mentioned and yet are animorily involved.

These two one (1) you and me, for we voted for the imencinomistic and (2) our predecessors who parsimonious The lusted to orderly provide the city with needed improvenents over the post thirty years.
